more or less Byronic in temperament, although immaculate in morals, has given him an almost exclusive foothold in certain dramatic lines. An excellent actor, whose personality commands interest while his methods inspire respect, he has found the greatest opportunity of his career in "The Only Way," whose attractions were so great that many who desired to see it last great that many who desired to see it last night could not secure admittance. Sidney Carton is one of the ideal types of fiction which live side by side in the imagination with the flesh and blood people of history. His story of self-effacement is one of the most sweetly pathetic narratives the book shelf can afford. Mr. Miller's performance of the part may be summarizeed in few of the part may be summarizeed in few words. It realizes the character. The words. It realizes the character. The actor's rich, melodious voice lends pathos even where the phrases themselves are barren, and his natural demeanor has the instinctive grace which proclaims Carton one of nature's noblemen, who claims deference even though he has forfeited his birthright. As a study of Sidney Carton the work is a magnificent one, and the piece devotes itself rigorously to the development of this single theme.

While the scenery is profuse and adequate, the performance does not take rank as a spectacular reproduction of scenes of CITY AND DISTRICT.

dramatist who can handle a literary masterpiece with so reverent a touch erary masterpiece with so reverent a touch as to content the book-lover is yet to appear. As a reflection of the Dickens quality, "The Only Way" has little value. Some of the most fascinating characters are dismissed from consideration with an abruptness which seems impertinent. A function which assumes to associate itself with "A Tale of Two Citles" has no right to eliminate the gruesome matron, Mme. Defarge, and that valiant spinster, Miss Pross. Even Jerry Cruncher seems to have some Even Jerry Cruncher seems to have some standing slight as his connection with the story proper is. And in lieu of all these the presents a character of his own inauthor presents a character of his own invention, a young woman whom Sidney Carton has philanthropically befriended, and who loves him, although he does not know it, and who follows him to the scaffold. COLUMBIA THEATER.-Mr. Richard COLUMBIA THEATER.—Mr. Richard Mansheld is always personally interesting and dramatically instructive. "The First Violin," in which he appeared to a distinguished audience of standing room proportions at the Columbia last night, is an unaffected medium for the display of his versatility in the interpretations of character and his subtle methods in the quiet fields of simple romance. The character of Eugene Courvoisier is of directly real that if Mr. Mansfield is not the sympathetic and uncomplaining man of sentiment his assumption is a tribute to his art. If it be indeed the man there is shame and confusomption is a tribute to his art. If it be indeed the man there is shame and confusion for his critics and detractors. The play was adapted by J. I. C. Clarke from the romance by Jessie Fothergill. It is essentially German in character and treatment; German in its spirit of simple geniality and intercourse, it is tuned to a slumber-leid and the plaintive quality of the spring song. It appeals to that pathetic affection which is felt for a bunch of simple flowers gathered by childish love on the roadside, and is impossible of refusal. Music and harmonious blending are the characteristics of the production, and the rendering of the aria from "Samson and Delilah" by Miss Marguerite Hall in the third act is an effective culmination and gives actual expression to the general theme. It is like a genre picture, a picture of the little life in a German conservatory town, where muste is the food of the production, where muste is the food of the production of the production where muste is the food of the production. fective culmination and gives actual expression to the general theme. It is like a genre picture, a picture of the little life in a German conservatory town, where music is the food of the people if not their drink. In the character of Eugen Courvoisier Mr. Mansfield is reminiscent of the gentlemantly and lovable courier in "Prince karl." It is without affectation, There is no storming of dramatic heights; 'here are none in sight, and there are no cyincal epigrams to dazzle and deceive. It is a simple portrayal of the nobleman in the story, who to shield the memory of his erring wife confesses to forgery by leaving his baronial estate and in the guise of a musician accepts the position of irst vicini in the orchestra of the Ton Halle at Elberthal. His associates are the large-hearted inhabitants of the real Bohemia, and, cheered by the presence of his little son, who accompanies him, he struggles on until the child is taken from him by those who believe him to be unworthy of its charge. Then follow days of darkness, relieved only by his untold love for a young English girl who sings in concerts at the Ton Halle. Finally in the ancient chapel of the Rothenfels the storm passes and the sun returns after the rain. Forgiven, vindicated and restored to his estates and position, he claims the woman whom he worshiped when as Herr Courvoisier he played the first violin at Elberthal. The production is staged in Mr. Mansfield's usual careful manner, his company is competent and know their positions in the harmony. Eugen Courvoisier is not a great character achievement for Mr. Mansfield's usual careful manner, his company is competent and know their positions in the harmony. Eugen Courvoisier is not a great character achievement for Mr. Mansfield. "The First Violin" is merely a literary trifle, a dramatic adaglo con expressione.

Dempsey as Mephistopheles, were deficient either in dramatic or vocal ability. Payne Clark sang "Faust" for two scenes and was then compelled by a cold to relinquish the role to Grafton G. Baker, who, in spite of a slight unfamiliarity with the action, was much of an improvement. Miss Clara Lane was unable to appear as Marguerite, being confined to her home on account of a severe cold, and will not sing the remainder of the week. NEW NATIONAL THEATER.—Mr. Henry Miller has been steadily developing as the recognized exponent of refined gloom. Theatric melancholy early marked him for its own, and his interpretations of roles more or less Byronic in temperament, alternate in the role of the was handicapped by the deficiences of the cast around him. The opera was fairly staged, although some fault may be found with the grouping of the parts, is one of the saving points of the production. ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Elaborate advertising methods by the manager of "The Queen of Chinatown" served to crowd the Academy of Music last night with an expectant audience. The promises given were carried out and the hopes of the spectators realized. "The Queen of Chinatown" is a typical melodrama, and teaches the usual moral lesson in the punishment of the wicked and the reward of the good. What little story there is to the play deals with the disastrous results of young girls "slumming" in New York's wretched quarters and indulging in optum smoking. Two girls ming" in New York's wretched quarters and indulging in opium smoking. Two girls are abducted by the Chinese "highbinders," and their rescues by friends furnish the thrilling moments of the play. During the action of the piece specialties are introduced in the way of songs and dances, which were received with pleasurable acclaim. The company is headed by Will S. Harkins, Logan Paul, Louis M. Granat, Laura Biggar, Anna Wilkes and Sadie Connolly, and is ample in every respect for the emphasizing the strong points of the play The different scenes were well and almost accurately set, and contributed immensely toward a successful presentation. Patron of the Academy who admire melodrams will be pleased with "The Queen of China-

THE NEW GRAND.—Of course, there must be a limit to all things, even to the excellence of a vaudeville bill at the New Grand, despite the number of "greatest bills yet" that have been astutely announced during the season. This week it would seem that the ideal in the line of polite vaudeville had been attained. The attraction is the Behman show. Beginning with a remarkably clever comedy acrobatic with a remarkably clever comedy acrobatic sketch and concluding with a dainty mirror dance by Diana, the bill is varied and indance by Diana, the bill is varied and interesting. The Behman show is an excellent one collectively and individually; the bill a gingery, snappy one. Honors last evening were about evenly divided between the Rossow Midgets, remarkably funny bits of humanity, appreciating their own minuteness and making the best of it in a clever way, and the Four Cohans, who are perhaps the best known of any people on the vaudeville circuit today. The Cohans playlet, written by George M. of the quartet, is one of the brightest, most laughable sketches on the boards. It is entitled "Running for Office." The Cohans have been in the business long enough to know "Running for Office." The Cohans have been in the business long enough to know what they want, and they seem to have got it. Their act went enthusiastically with last night's big audience, ending with a series of curtain calls. All of the "Four-in-hand" do exceptionally good work. The Midgets, Frank and Charlie Rossow, make their entrance standing in the pailms of their entrance standing in the paims of their assistant's hands. They are but their assistant's hands. They are but twenty-four and twenty-eight inches high. They do a comical burlesque on the regu-lation acrobatic act, interspersing their comedy with some really clever feats. These two star teams are by no means "the whole show." Ramza and Arno have "Europe's Foremost Acrobats," must certainly be the same, for their work is far above that of any female performers in that line usually seen in vaudeville. For once here is a female acrobatic turn that BIJOU THEATER.-The Bijou this week is given up to a regular combination, styled on the bills "Fads and Follies." Generally speaking, yesterday's performances offered good, clean, variety entertainment. A very fair olio opens the bill. The La Reane Trio with a deer little tot of a haby girl prowith a deer little tot of a haby girl prowith a dear little tot of a baby girl presented an excellent sketch. Then came Darmody, with a juggling specialty; Whallen and Du Pree, who danced themselves into favor, and Harris and Walters, in a character sketch. Mike Whallen gave a number of humorous songs. The burlesque was above the average.

KERNAN'S LYCEUM THEATER.—The Rentz-Santley Burlesque Company is the pioneer of its class, and for a dozen years it has enjoyed a reputation second to none in the burlesque world. This year a very good bill is presented, and at both performances at Kernan's yesterday large audiences were on hand. "The Sporty Duchess" opened the program and was more or less enjoyable. The satire on "Sapho" is still a new and undeveloped feature. In the olio Fialkowski gave some excellent impersonations and mimicked animals in a satisfactory manner. The Dumont sisters found many admirers of their songs and Sheehan and Kennedy had little trouble in provoking merriment with their funny sketch, "True to Nature." Frank Houghton performed many new and difficult tricks on the bicycle. Bryant and Saville, who have been a musical team for years, have a sketch which proved a winner. Ford and Dot West, as the walter and the maid, were fair, and a new burlesque, entitled "A Hot Time With Shakespeare," closed the bill." KERNAN'S LYCEUM THEATER.-The WILLARD'S HALL.—A large audience witnessed the cinematographic views of the Passion Play, given under the direction of Messrs. Colton and Glover last night at Willard's Hall. There were twenty-two principal and dramatic scenes of the play, each accompanied by a brief but interesting lecture delivered by Rev. William J. Thompson. Preceding the exhibition, music was rendered by a large choir of boys, assisted by Misses Eva Whitford as soloist and Mary Radcliffe as organist. The pictures have the interest which attaches to absolute reliability and have aroused interest wherever displayed.

MARK HAMBOURG'S RECITAL.—The recital of Mark Hambourg, the young Russian planist, at the Columbia Theater this afternoon at 4:15 o'clock is a musical event of unusual interest. Mr. Hambourg has been heard once in this city, in concert with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, and he then created a very favorable impression. In a recital he will be heard to much better advantage and his program will give him an opportunity to show the extent of his reading and the versatility of his action. He has met with remarkable success in New York, having given five recitals, each one to a crowded house. His last recital in that city was yesterday afternoon, and the large audience was excited to positive enthusiasm several times during the playing of his program.

what is known as the highway extension act of March 2, 1893, and of the amendatory act of June 28, 1898, the other three sections having been made, approved and placed on record.

The territory embraced in the fourth section is regarded as the roughest, and because of the topography of the land it has been found impracticable to extend the streets and avenues of the city with the uniformity found possible in the other sections. Most of the streets in the fourth section will be ninety feet wide, many of the most prominent avenues and streets being 190 feet in width. The names of the streets as they exist in the city have been continued as far as practicable, but as very many of the new thoroughfares have been curved because of the topography of the country, new names will have to be given them. The principal thoroughfare in this section will be Fort drive, about eight miles in length, and so called because it passes about all of the prominent forts in this part of the District.

The Commissioners will hear all persons interested in this section at 11 citeler Trees.

The Commissioners will hear all person day morning, the 6th of March. So they have received no objections to plans prepared by their direction.

"Seeing is Believing."

When you see people cured by a remedy, you must believe in its power. Look around you. Friends, relatives, neighbors all say that Hood's Sarsaparilla, America's Greatest dear ones. There's nothing like it in the world to purify the blood.

Eruptions—"My little daughter's face broke out with pimples, which became as large as a five-cent plece. Treatment did no good until I began giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time after this the scabs fell off, leaving the skin perfectly free from any scar. Her skin is now smooth and white, and she has never had any skin trouble whatever since her cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. ELLA L BALDERSTON, 155 High street, Anacostia, D. C.

After Typhoid Fever—"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla after typhoid fever and it did me so much good that I now keep it in the honse all the time. Whenever I have those tired feelings I find this medicine just the thing to drive them away. As a spring and fall medicine I regard Hood's Sarsaparilla as without a rival, and have recommended it many times to friends and acquaintances," W. H. DEDRICK, 46 I street n.e., Washington, D. C.
